Both in my private practise and at Relate, I have had more than ten years experience helping all sorts of people, with all sorts of issues, make sense of their problems.

The clients I see often feel overwhelmed by circumstances that seem out of their control:
- their partner may have left them,
- they may feel guilty about an affair,
- their relationship communications may have become a series of escalating arguments that quickly spiral out of control,
- their relationship has possibly begun to feel 'stale',
- they may feel anxious about their sexual performance,
- they may be experiencing sexual pain,
- they may be worried about their sexual orientation,
- they may not feeling good about themselves and have low self-esteem,
- they may be preoccupied with negative thoughts.

These are just some of the type of issues that I deal with on a daily basis, so why not give yourself a chance to let me try and help you too.

My therapeutic approach is an integrative one, however for most sexual dysfunctions, the approach is primarily cognitive behavioural therapy.
